SENATE

Senate held a meeting on Friday, 25 February, and the following items were among those discussed.

Senate nominations

The Chairman of the Nominating Committee, Mickey McCannel, reminded Senate members that as of 30 June there would be several Senate vacancies. The Committee normally presents a list of candidates at the April meeting of Senate. Nominations are accepted from members of Senate, the University, and the community, and they should be placed with the Senate Office by 11 March.

Emil Skarin Memorial Fund

The Emil Skarin Memorial Fund Committee is now engaged in selecting a project or projects for financial support through interest earned by the Emil Skarin Memorial Fund. The project must be of some value to the public as well as to the University; it must be consistent with the general aims and purposes of the University; and it must be a project not normally funded by the University. Preference will be given to projects with an emphasis on the humanities and the arts, but there are no restrictions on the nature of eligible projects. Application forms are available from the Senate Office and should be returned by 1 April.

Foreign student follow-up

Joe Kandler, Chairman of an ad hoc committee to consider steps that might be taken as a follow-up to the foreign student issue, told Senate that the issue of foreign students and the fee increase had two major components: foreign students and the question of University autonomy. The committee felt that though the question of University autonomy was an extremely important one, there was not sufficient time to deal with it properly. Thus, the committee felt that it might be more profitable to concentrate on the question of foreign students. In the opinion of the ad hoc committee, Senate should consider establishing a suitable body to investigate the issue and arrive at recommendations that could be presented to Senate, government, and the University. The committee recommended that Senate's group should deal with a number of aspects of the foreign student issue. A resolution was passed to this effect: "That Senate establish a Task Force on Visiting International Students [the committee felt that "foreign student" was a "misnomer" that added to the "confusion" and that it should be replaced with "international visiting student"] which would attempt: (a) to define the total issue and the underlying questions, (b) to gather more information about the distribution of these students in Alberta, the quota situation, and the availability of support funds, (c) to discover the public perception of the visiting international student issue and to help clarify this issue in the mind of the public by disseminating the available information by the appropriate means, (d) to maintain liaison with other post-secondary institutions in the province and to exchange facts and ideas with them, and (e) to make recommendations."

Task Force on Native Students

The Senate Task Force on Native Students presented its interim report. The Task Force, formed in March 1975, has the responsibility to "gather information about the situation of natives in relation to the University of Alberta" and to (a) "discover more information about treaty and non-treaty native students who are now at the University," (b) "determine the subsequent history of native graduates of the University," (c) "gather information about what is done for native students at other universities," (d) "discover the reasons for the apparent differences between the record of Alberta in educating native students at the university level and that of comparable provinces," and (e) "make recommendations."

After having supported the formation of the Office of Adviser on Native Affairs, with Marilyn Buffalo MacDonald being appointed in November 1975, the Task Force temporarily halted its activities. Then in the fall of 1976, the Task Force was reactivated with an expanded membership.

Task Force members made presentations on such topics as Project Morningstar and programs for native students at other universities. Guests Marilyn Buffalo MacDonald, Native Affairs Adviser, and Colleen Glenn, President of the newly formed University of Alberta Native Students Club, made presentations as well. After a general introduction by Roy Jamha, Chairman of the Task Force, Mickey McCannel spoke on Project Morningstar, a program located at Blue Quills School near St. Paul that provides native students with the first two years of the University's BEd program. (After successfully completing the two-year program, students are given an interim certificate that allows them to teach; they then have up to five years to complete their BEd degree. Project Morningstar was developed to correct the shortage of qualified Indian teachers in Alberta.) The Task Force members who visited the school were very impressed with it and recommend it become permanently established.

Task Force members Patti Meekison, Georgie Brooks, and Hazel Braithwaite spoke on programs and services offered at other universities. Ms. Meekison pointed out that in most cases the emphasis is on training native teachers, and added that there is still a need for special programs to attract native students and for support services such as counselling, tutoring, and student organizations. Georgie Brooks informed Senate of the University of Lethbridge's Department of Native American Studies, founded in cooperation with native communities in the area. The program, which has 202 students enrolled this year, consists of fifteen undergraduate courses in native culture and four courses in linguistics, two each in Cree and Blackfoot. Hazel Braithwaite told Senate about the programs at the University of Calgary, which were developed through requests from the native community. The Indian Student University Program Services is a four-year-old program designed to train non-matriculated native students over the age of twenty-one; the majority of students in the program are training to be teachers. There is also an Indian Studies Program in the Division of Continuing Education that offers courses open to all persons interested in learning about Indian issues and concerns. When students in these programs were asked to evaluate the programs, they felt that there was perhaps too much emphasis on Education and Social Welfare opportunities and not enough on such subjects as Engineering and Commerce.

Joe Kandler then spoke on concerns and issues relating to native education. He urged recognition of the importance of programs like Project Morningstar and recommended that students be encouraged to come from that program to the University. He urged that facilities be made available to the Native Students Club so that native students would have a place to meet on campus. He also suggested that there be more publicity regarding the opportunities for native education here: for example, an open house weekend for native students. He added that it is important to investigate the native education situation in Alberta and said that the Senate could make an effort to bring the situation to the public's attention.

Marilyn MacDonald informed the Senate of the work her office performs, the difficulties she faces, and the hopes she has for the future. She would like to see more services provided for native students in the form of counselling, tutoring, and improved course offerings. If service resources are not sufficient, she said, the university dropout rate will be as high as that of high school. Ms. MacDonald stressed the need "to gather resources together" and the need for "dialogue between faculties and native people"; above all, she said, native students "need action."

Colleen Glenn spoke to Senate on the problems faced by native students at the University. She said that the University often seems too large and impersonal and native students often need orientation programs and tutoring and counselling to adjust. She emphasized the importance of Project Morningstar and stressed a need to encourage native students to come to the University because, as she said, "native students will not go someplace they're not invited."

After considerable discussion of, and support for, the interim report by Senate members, a resolution was put forward and carried: "It is resolved that this meeting of Senate give authority to the Task Force on Native Students to continue its activities in seeking information to fulfill its terms of reference with the objective of having the Task Force formally conclude its activities by submission of a final report to the November 1977 meeting."

Amendments to the Universities Act

Senate members were informed of three amendments to the Universities Act that would affect the Senate. These amendments were derived from submissions that opposed the Draft Adult Education Act and that were received by the Minister of Advanced Education. The three pertinent amendments are: (a) to clarify the nomination procedures for and the duties of the chancellors of universities, (b) to establish a broader base of senate representation through increasing public membership and through establishing non-academic staff representation, and (c) to specify senate procedures for removal from office and for election to fill vacancies.

JAPANESE LECTURER TO VISIT CAMPUS

Muramatsu Takeshi, a distinguished author of many books and specialist in comparative culture, will speak on campus on Saturday, 5 March, at 4 p.m. His topic will be "The way of thinking of the Japanese."

Professor Muramatsu is a former newspaper correspondent, covering such events as the Eichmann trial in Israel in 1961, the Algerian war in 1962, the Vietnam War in 1963 and 1965, the Six Days War in 1967, and the Suez War in 1970. He is on a lecture tour of Canadian universities. His visit to Edmonton is sponsored by the Consulate-General of Japan in Edmonton, the Japan Foundation, and the University's East Asian Studies Committee.

The lecture will be given in Saskatchewan Room C in the Faculty Club. The public is invited.

COUNCIL FOR ADVANCEMENT AND SUPPORT OF EDUCATION

The annual conference of CASE (District VIII) was held in Banff, 15 to 18 February. CASE is the professional association that concerns itself with college fund raising; news and information; publications; and public, alumni, and government relations throughout North America.

The main theme of the conference was that of coordination and cooperation. Workshops and lectures dealt with instructional relations, internal communications, the role of the media in university affairs, and advanced methods of reaching the public—from the prospective students to the alumni. Ron Dalby, Chancellor of this University, delivered one of two "keynote" addresses entitled "Is money really our major challenge?" The President, Harry E. Gunning, participated on a panel of presidents that discussed the question "Where does higher education go from here?"

The chairperson for the conference was Barbara Lacroix of the Public Relations Office. She was elected to serve a third term on the District VIII Board. Also participating were W.A.D. Burns, Assistant Registrar who coordinated a workshop; Dale Soper of the Public Relations Office who was the conference registrar; Theresa Papirnic of the Fund Development Office who was treasurer for the conference; Ron Thomas and Rick Pilger of the Public Relations Office; David Chester of the Publications Office; Alex Markle, Executive Secretary of the Alumni Association, and A.M. Arbeau, Vice-President of the Alumni Association.

REPORT EXAMINES UNDERGRADUATE STUDIES IN ENGLISH

A report prepared for the Association of Canadian University Teachers of English (ACUTE) and released at the University of Alberta is critical of many developments in the teaching of English. The report, On Undergraduate Studies in English in Canadian Universities, was, in part, commissioned because of the widespread belief that the level of literacy in students had fallen.

It finds that an increasing number of students are coming to the nation's universities deficient in English training and that trends toward demanding less from university students and the proliferation of alternative English courses in the universities are leading away from sound English education.

The report was commissioned by ACUTE in 1975, and funding was provided by the Richard Ivey Foundation. The two professors commissioned to prepare it, F.E.L. Priestley and his assistant H.I. Kerpneck, are both from the University of Toronto. In their preface, Professors Priestley and Kerpneck state that the report "finds much to blame and offers few words of praise." However, they temper this by explaining the report was "primarily concerned with problems" and that they "do not find English instruction in Canadian universities . . . in a state of ruin or total depravity." But, the prime emphasis of the report is very much on those things that to the authors seem "harmful at present and threatening for the future."

The professors find that, although the top ten or fifteen percent of "the students at the gates" of the universities are as proficient in English as in the past, the remainder are much less prepared. Causes given for this include a deterioration in "what might be called public language" and this is closely associated with the pervasive effects of television; the decrease in time spent in English instruction in the schools, especially less time spent teaching grammar; the abandonment of external examinations; and a decline in the qualification of English teachers, coupled with greater demands on them.

The recent development that has most provinces substituting the Bachelor of Education degree, usually carrying minimal requirements for English study, for the Bachelor of Arts degree followed by one year of teacher training as the normal qualification for teaching English in the high school is sharply criticized.

Admitting that "there is no danger whatsoever of a drastic policy of failing students at any level," the professors see the universities as having a choice of steadily lowering standards or trying to do something with the incoming freshmen. Although they present reasons why it is not the job of the universities to remedy the problem (the deficiencies are at the pre-university level and it is not the responsibility of the universities to give instruction at any but their own level and the cost in money and manpower would be too great) the professors recognize that the universities will continue to become involved in this area.

However, they stress, "University teaching of the fundamentals of English composition and of comprehension can be nothing but an emergency measure, a stop gap of limited effectiveness to be abandoned as soon as the emergency itself can be resolved."

In examining the course offerings of the nation's forty-plus university English departments, the authors deplore the increasing proliferation of course offerings at the expense of basic study. This is seen as resulting from a number of causes: the trend toward the semester system; the unwillingness of instructors to be told what to teach; the desire by students to have free choice; and the competition for students, which often leads to gimmick courses.

Focussing on the offerings in Canadian literature, the report says that the impression some have that few Canadian universities teach Canadian literature could not be farther from the truth. However, the authors indicate that they are far from satisfied with many of the Canadian courses currently offered. "Too many of them seem shaped by a mixture of nationalistic fervor, an admiration for novelty, an urge to be up-to-date, and an eye for current fashion rather than by a wish to bring the student in to touch with the wide variety of good writing, past and present, done in Canada."

The report emphasized the professors' view that, although some of their colleagues fear that insistence on high standards in specialized English programs will bring about a decline in enrolment, the available evidence seems to indicate the opposite.

The report also urges a high degree of coordination between honors and major courses and cautions against the tendency to have the "academic aristocrats" teach the honors and graduate courses while the department's "academic blue collars" are left to the general or pass courses. The authors stress a need for the better qualified and more experienced instructors to be involved with courses at all levels.

The report concludes with a look at the faculty problems among those teaching English in Canadian universities. The authors find the general level of competence throughout the profession to be "very good." In fact they state, "One of the agreeable surprises of our tour was to discover the high quality and the enthusiasm of the staff at a number of the smaller institutions and at a good many of the newer small or middle-sized ones."

One problem the professors stress is the lack of opportunities for young Canadian scholars. They frown on the tendency of many departments to fill vacancies with a senior person from abroad who will add to the prestige of the department rather than hiring young Canadians who could contribute to the department's future strength.

Another problem detailed in the final section of the report is that of recurrent cutbacks made by university administrators reacting to financial pressures. "[If] cuts have to be made in the budget, the humanities, especially English, seem to them obviously the place where cuts will not hurt." The result, say the authors, is under-staffed departments, a decline in morale, and an increase in the teaching responsibilities given to part-time instructors and term employees who cannot devote the proper time or effort to the job. Also criticized in the report is the emphasis placed on publication when making promotions and granting tenure to faculty.

Comments and questions on the report will be received by Juliet McMaster, Professor of English at the University and President of ACUTE. They can be directed to her in care of the Department of English.
